Dear Andrew

I have checked our records and the existing conservatory didn't have planning permission therefore was not bound by any planning controls. When looking at the new proposal I have to judge it on its own merits and not that it will have the same effect as existing. As such, I can't see that there will be a big issue with un-frosted windows facing the plot of land adjacent to No 159. However I can't say the same for the elevation facing the neighbouring property to the west. That side may well cause some overlooking issues but it needs to be assessed more clearly during the application process. I will have to look at the boundary treatment, and the orientation of the dwellings, to assess the proposal. The height differences within the rear garden will also factor in my decision. I have only assessed the proposal from the details you sent to me via email. I can assess the proposals in greater detail upon submission of an application.

Kind Regards

Georgina
